Blaise was my son and my heart. He touched me in so many ways. We truly understood each other. He treated me with so much love and respect. We had amazing and deep conversations and the most precious thing he would share was his love for music! He would send me songs he loved. Here is the song he sent to me by Trevor Hall called YOU CAN'T RUSH THE HEALING -It comes to me upon the strings When I hear it, well, I sing! I can't say it's my creation. Staying patient what it brings. Let me say I'm coming humble! I don't know what's right or wrong! Just keep, keep on believin' Passing down an old, old song. An old song. So, you can't rush your healing. Darkness has its teachings. Love is never leaving. You can't rush your healing. Your healing. I will miss you so much and I will be praying for your family. You Are With Me Always Blaise - I LOVE YOU, your black mama Gloria

Kate and Andy, I feel like I've lost one of my own you two! Blaise Howe!!- incredibly funny, nice as hell and wildy intelligent. He was almost a McCoy in middle school. He and Avery were a hot mess together. When he became an adult I could still see the sweet kid when he's move close to my face so earnestly. A few years back, Blaise told me I should write a column and shop it out to different newspapers. Blaise, buddy, maybe now I just will. It's sad that the physical world has lost Blaise's kind soul and crazy, bright personality but few people could left any more memories! Know that I'm thinking of the family right now. Avery and I will see you next week. .
